

All group members but Jacob were able to meet in order to do a dry run of our presentation. It was expected that we would have an essentially finished presentation by that time, and everything changed afterward would be in reaction to problems we encountered during this dry run.

It was definitely useful, because we saw that certain slides made the most sense in a different order, we were able to really get set in our minds what we wanted to say about each slide, and we were able to suggest things others may want to say in their own slides. We also discovered that we had put some information in twice, and removed it for the final.
